Introduction

James Clement

James Clement Hughes

1887–1953

Born in 1887 in Hackney, west London, James Clement was an ordinary man with extraordinary vision that helped change the course of history.

As a young man, James followed in his father's footsteps to become a mechanical engineer. Marrying in 1911, he and his new bride Hephzibah relocated to the industrial heartland of Manchester for a number of years before returning to London. It was here that James established his own consultant engineering practice, J.C. Hughes & Partners, in 1931. His hallmark lives on to this day in some of the iconic structures he designed.

James and Hephzibah had a son, John, who followed his father into the family business, becoming an accomplished engineer in his own right. During World War Two, John's renowned skill was called upon by the Allied forces in their quest to liberate occupied France and he became part of a top-secret operation to achieve the impossible – to breach the German-held and seemingly impenetrable Normandy coast. The codename was Mulberry Harbour.

Visionary in its design, Mulberry Harbour was made of steel and concrete – but it could float. This proved critical in the success of the largest seaborne invasion in history, the D-Day landings. Towed across the English Channel by boat, the harbour provided Allied vessels with safe moorings while floating ramps meant troops, tanks and artillery were able to make land. Two weeks later, all German efforts to secure their defences at Normandy were laid waste by what their own great defence architect Albert Speers described as "an idea of simple genius".

Today, the name James Clement is still synonymous with quality, innovative design, and a desire to make the world a better place.
